TRIBUTE PAID TO MEMORY OF MAJOR POWELL

Memorial Erected on Rim of Grand Canyon for Intrepid Explorer and Scientist Who First Explored Its Depths.

Lane has now realized what was planned at the international geological congress of 1904 in recognition of Major Powell's distinguished services as director of the United States geological survey. In March, 1907, congress appropriated $5,000 for the purpose. In recognition of his distinguished public services as a soldier, explorer, and administrator of government scientific work, Dr. Holmes chose the site. The original purpose was to make the memorial a bronze chair facing the canyon. Last spring Secretary Lane substituted an altar for the chair, and Mark Daniels, then general superintendent and landscape engineer of national parks, designed the structure as it stands today. It was then late in July, and Mr. Walter Ward, engineer of the reclamation service, had a difficult task before him to find and hew the rock and build the structure within the slender appropriation. The Riverside Portland Cement company helped by donating half the cement. This memorial, so expressive of the spirit and character of the man whose life work it celebrates, and so admirably located, will be formally dedicated early next summer. Secretary Lane's purpose is to make the event one of impressive importance. It is, as expected, congress monument makes the Grand Canyon a national park (it is a national monument now), the two dedications will take place together, making a celebration altogether notable in the history of national parks. Devotional Fires on the Altar. This memorial, embodying to a remarkable degree the essential spirit of the Grand Canyon, is planned to become the scene of perhaps daily ceremonies of a most interesting character, reviving the spirit and to some extent the practice of the ancient religious forms in vogue among the original Indian tribes of the neighborhood. Devotional fires will blaze every day. John Wesley Powell was born at Mount Morris, N. Y., March 24, 1834, of English parents. He taught school in Illinois till the civil war, when he entered as a private and came out as a lieutenant colonel. But he was always called "major." He lost his right arm at the battle of Shiloh. At the close of the war Major Powell became professor of geology in the University of Wisconsin. An intrepid wanderer in wild places, he led a small party of students and naturalists in 1872 into the mountains of Colorado. His incidental exploration of two small canyons of the Grand Canyon National Park, which shaped his after career, namely, to explore the canyons of the Grand and Green rivers and of the then mysterious Colorado river which their union forms. The following summer he organized his expedition, proceeded down the Grand river and across the mountains to the White river, where from his winter camp he made extensive studies of the rivers and their canyons, and explored the basin of his famous passage of the unknown Colorado. His great adventure, the passage of the Grand Canyon of the Colorado, was made in the summer of 1893. Until then it was unknown. An enough had been said since then, but the gorge is known for his famous passage of the unknown Colorado. ## How She Cured Her Husband

"For five years my husband suffered with his stomach. The medicine he took only gave relief for a while, nothing cured, writes Mrs. Sarah Baker of Nottingham, Mo. 'Our merchant bought some of Chamberlain's medicine last fall and also received some free trial samples of Chamberlain's Stomach and Liver Tablets. He gave some of them and I wanted my husband to try them. He said it would do no good. His stomach had been troubling him worse than ever. At last on Friday I told him if he would not take these tablets I was going to send for a doctor, and he said he would take them. By Monday he was like another man. The blues were gone, no more trouble with his stomach, and the best part is that the trouble has not returned. I cannot praise Chamberlain's Tablets too highly.'" mile or two, can descend to the river. This we find on examination; but such a portage would be impracticable for us, and we must run the rapid or abandon the river. There is no hesitation. We step into our boats, push off, and away we go, first on smooth but swift water, then we strike a glassy wave, and ride to the top, again on a higher wave, and down and up on waves higher and still higher, until we strike one just as it curls back, and a breaker rolls over our little boat.

"Still, on we speed, shooting past projecting rocks, till the little boat is caught in a whirlpool and spun around several times. At last we pull out again into the stream.

"Hurled back from a rock, now on this side, now on that, we are carried into an eddy, in which we struggle for a few minutes, and are then out again, the breakers still rolling over us."

How Bright Angel Was Named.
The many thousands who have descended the Bright Angel trail at the Grand Canyon will be interested in this entry under date of August 15: "The little affluent which we have discovered here is a clear, beautiful creek, or river, as it would be termed in this western country, where streams are not abundant. We have named one stream away above in honor of the great chief of the 'Bad Angels,' and as this is in beautiful contrast to that, we conclude to name it Bright Angel."

On August 17 he writes: "It is especially cold in the rain tonight. The little canvas we have is rotten and useless; the rubber poncho with which we started from Grand Canyon has been torn, and more than half the party is without hats, and not one of us has an entire suit of clothes, and we have not a blanket apiece. So we gather driftwood and build a fire; but after supper the rain, coming down in torrents, extinguishes it, and we sit up all night on the rocks shivering, and are more exhausted by the cold night's discomfort than by the day's toil."

Below, the river turns again to the right; the canyon is very narrow, and we see in advance but a short distance. The water, too, is very swift, and there is no landing place. From around this curve there comes a mad roar, and down we are carried, with a dizzying velocity to the head of another rapid. On either side, high above our heads, there are overhanging granite walls, and the sharp bends cut off our view, so that a few minutes will carry us into unknown waters.

"Away we go on one long, winding, chute; I stand on deck, supporting myself with a strap fastened on either side to the gunwale, and the boat glides rapidly where the water is smooth, or striking a wave, she leaps and bounds like a thing of life, and we have a wild, exhilarating ride for ten miles, which we make in less than an hour. The excitement is so great that we forget the danger until we hear the roar of a great fall below; then we back on our oars and are carried slowly towards its head, and succeed in landing just above, and find that we have to make another portage.

Deserters Never Returned.
And so on. The diary recounts a continual succession of exciting battles with fate. Meanwhile, in repeated upsets, one of the boats is lost and most of their flour destroyed. They are down to a few days' rations, principally of dried apples.

On August 23 three of the party left them, preferring to take their chances of climbing the most perpendicular walls and finding their way to some settlement. And you are further notified that unless you enter or cause to be entered your appearance in said name on or before the 31st day of February, A. D. 1916, a decree pro confesso will be taken against you and the relief granted for will be granted. The names of the deserters are: W. A. Kiehl, whose postoffice address is Albuquerque, New Mexico; A. E. WALKER, (GEO.)

in work of similar nature prompted him to seek annual appropriations for conducting an independent survey of the territories. In this work he continued in charge of both bureaus until his resignation in 1894. Subsequently to that he devoted his attention entirely to the bureau of ethnology, of which he was director until his death in September, 1902.

The geological survey was built into an efficient organization under the personal direction and guidance of Major Powell.
